In 1885 an Austrian iron smelter worker found a rare find. It is called the Bucket of Salzburg and up until now it is pretty much not understood. It is definitely from a very old civilization and it was used in sports. They were not especially knowledgeable in metallurgy as may be assumed, however they melted some stuff together and managed to form this ball for sport. It is as old as Stonehenge for sure. The author's initial clairvoyant look at this item dated it at 370,000 years old, however the strange art of clairvoyance mixed with the fact that this artifact was found embedded in a place in the earth considered over 2 million years old. Either way, the exact date is not essential to the initial look at such a strange find. The important thing as always to note is that this is a genuine find and not a fabricated hoax or otherwise unimportant item (there are always several hoaxes from sadists and go-getters available in this field of research).

It was used in a rolling competition. The referee would say, "Okay, go!" and the contestants would toss it down a hillside to see how far they could get it to go. It may have had something similar to rubber stretched over it as a covering of the actual metal ball. I hope you enjoyed this Akashic History. Now on to the next piece of research into the arcane and forboding.

Avebury Stone Circle should be renamed Avebury Pagan Circle. They were caucasoid mound builders. They created the circle for lunar cycles and to keep time accordingly. They were the Druids and this monument was built around 5,000 BC. For the new moon they did something special, like a ceremonial procession. The circle has the time contained within it. They also had a lot of mounds. They were Adepts, Masters and were advanced in Occult Histories. They performed something akin to seances and summonings, although more arcane and accurate. They were in possession of runes and scripts. Although the Druids of Avebury Pagan Circle were Masters and Adepts they were also frolicking, merry, good natured and free-spirited.

Mothman. This took about two minutes to clairvoyantly decipher. Very bad. He came here from the 8th sphere. The eighth sphere is difficult to describe but it is a locality outside of the realm of life, a place where beings are separated from the other spheres. It is a concept found in all of the occult teachings throughout all ages and true occultists do not dwell on it, even though they are aware of its existence. Naturally as occultists we deal with all of the realms, but that is beyond the point. The mothman is not alive. His sole purpose in coming here was to devour life and it's not good if you see it.

Let's take a look at the questionings of the mass-consciousness of the world in the day we are now living in and see what is going on. It seems like people right now are wondering about the following:

- Are we aliens?
- Is there a way out of this planet?
- Do people live on Mars?
- Are we visiting other planets (secretively or otherwise)?
- Do they know us (the ET's)?
- Who are they out there?
- What aliens are out there?
- What are we going to do?
- Is there stuff in space?
- What are the secrets of inter-dimensional reality?
- Can we fly to other universes or parallel worlds?

These are twelve prevalent questions in the mass-idea of the world today. Generally speaking most people do not believe in spirits because it's not science. In effect they see outer space in a physical level similar to our earth. These questions are being pondered inside their souls day in and day out all across the world. It will stay this way until the ideas themselves shift until the pattern is completed. As far as answering these questions, some are easier than others to give answers to, not because of the details of the objective facts but because of the spiritual nature of all life and knowledge, therefore these are more or less effects of the commonplace mindset of today's world rather than a true search for occult answers.

The Baghdad Battery is actually relatively unimpressive. Yes it is a great find for mainstream science, but as occultists we know far better discoveries are awaiting and have already been found. But nevertheless ATA is a zine that covers a wide range of things, already in its eleventh issue, so expect more to come. This finding could light a flame and it was a source of artificial lighting. The owners would exclaim, “now we can see!” They knew about polarity. They may have found the instructions written upon a wall near a temple site. It was a permanent flame although it emitted an odor. It is fascinating to realize how the ancient world differs from ours because their source of media and information was not computers or billboards, but ancient temple walls and markings on old landmarks. The ancient world worked in such a different and beautiful way, but that is not to say that our world is so new either as one day it will be considered entirely historically. Stay tuned for more ATA each and every Tuesday at <http://nxxs.org> The Noumenal Extrasensory Existent Society.
